Description

Explain, 2019 is a recent performance developed over a 6-day observational period for the specific context of the Paraná Public Library in Curitiba. It is indicative of ongoing characteristics in Johnston's practice notably, the use of improvisational processes that explore physical states of responsiveness, formed in relation to the actualities of situations and the precise moment of making. Actions are assembled using found objects and are intended as sensorial propositions whereby the audience observes the emergence of latent relationships between materials, gestures and the residues of memory. These 'provisional behaviors' exist as irrational, incomplete and mutable encounters.
