Description

Fiona Reilly is a multidisciplinary artist based in Dublin. She is interested in the overlap between art, everyday life, human action and social systems. Her work is driven by research and chance encounters alike. Mediums employed include drawing, embroidery, collected and found objects, sound, performance and conversational events. Time is a recurring subject matter as are the topics of work, labour, anxiety, aspiration, success, failure and the everyday. Her practice straddles the fields of Fine Art and Socially Engaged Practice. This includes an ongoing investigation of their relationship with each other. She works using a combination of performative and event-based actions and the production of objects. Site, context, and circumstance are of fundamental importance and works often emerge in response to personal and social situations. Play, experimentation and repetition are tools she regularly employs. In recent work she seeks to investigate contemporary experiences of time and question ideas surrounding value, labour and work.
